

The telemarketing industry takes the stand that a lot of people like receiving information about new or existing products. Well, 2 out of 3 New Jersey residents who have phone lines registered their number on the Do Not Call Lists. Out of the remaining third, you can argue that many of those also would like to be left alone. No one I know enjoys being interrupted at home, especially during dinner hours or weekend mornings when you're trying to sleep, which is when the majority of the calls I have received generally arrive. If laws are for the greater good, then how can you possibly think of overturning a law which most are already in favor of? Someone up top must be getting their pockets lined pretty well if you asked me. Just do the right thing if it's not too difficult for you.
